Dear Licensees:

Alabama is commemorating its 200th birthday this year! Beauty, history and adventure all come together in Alabama, a state rich in experiences for visitors to savor. It's a place where you can take in all the sights, sounds, smells, flavors and sensations that you'll always remember.

For over 80 years, the Alabama Alcoholic Beverage Control Board has evolved alongside you and this great State. Following the era of Prohibition, each state individually decided how alcoholic beverages would be managed within its borders. The people of Alabama did not want alcoholic beverages marketed like soup and soft drinks. Recognizing the dangerous potential of excessive use of alcohol, Alabama citizens demanded its rigorous control.

Much has changed in the world over the last 200 years. As a business, it is important to maintain a vision for the future, it is equally important to look back and remember where you have been, as it was the past that defines what you are today. Following the era of Prohibition, Alabama's control method succeeds in balancing the promotion of moderation in the consumption of alcoholic beverages with the offering of a wide variety of products at fair prices, while returning a generous profit to the state's General Fund. Recipients of these funds include the Department of Mental Health, the Education Trust Fund and the Department of Human Resources.

In conclusion, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the ABC employees and our licensees for their dedication to excellence. It is the Board's goal to provide the best service to our customers through modern, convenient outlets and superior product selection in a controlled environment. Customer service remains a top priority of this agency. I encourage you to submit any ideas or suggestions that you might have and to contact my office anytime you have questions or need assistance.

Sincerely,

H.M. Gipson

WHISKEYS ARE growing, REGARDLESS OF ORIGIN

BY JACK ROBERTIELLO

While all the talk the past few years has been about the astounding rebirth of the American whiskey category, producers of many of the world's best-known imported whiskeys are similarly counting their lucky stars.

In fact, most marketers no longer think of whiskey in terms of discrete national styles but rather as one giant category, with consumers shifting back and forth on a journey of discovery of the various qualities of the spirits (from wherever they are made).

“We see that consumers aren't following a traditional whiskey journey anymore, but instead they are experimenting among all the whiskeys—Scotch, Irish, American. They're not category-loyal at all,” says Sona Bajaria, vice president, Glenlivet and high-end Irish Whiskey at Pernod Ricard USA.

That mode of experimentation has opened the doors for distillers all over the world to find new ways to innovate and enhance core brands, with limited-time offerings as well as new line extensions that appeal to newcomers to the category and create broader brand understanding and interest.

“The single malts category is gaining momentum and shares since there is a growing consumer interest in ‘craft’ products,” says Sandhya Padmanabhan, senior brand manager,

Johnnie Walker for Diageo. “This has caused a shift in experimentation when it comes to

consumer purchase

habits, as they are curious to seek out what's new or seemingly trendy in the spirits space.

Consumers are looking to enjoy

more quality, craft

cocktails featuring specialty ingredients, and we see Single Malt Scotch whisky being used as a key ingredient in combination (not substitution) with bourbon and Irish whiskey.”

Both the growth in bourbon and rye and the fascination with small distiller wares are fueling new interest in whiskeys. “All whiskey categories are seeing growth correlated with the popularity of American whiskey, as well as the boom of craft whiskey,” says Heather Howell, brand director, Emerging Brands for Brown-Forman. “Consumer palates are continually changing, which has led to exploration across all categories. The consumer profile for Irish whiskey and single malt Scotch is evolving, with an increase in female drinkers and younger drinkers.”

Recruiting new consumers to whiskey had been hard during the explosive flavored vodka years at the turn of the century, but now the action is found in whiskeys, and more innovation can be expected, especially as American consumers turn to premium spirits.

“We’re witnessing an ever-growing popularity for Scotch among younger drinkers both because our blends are more approachable and due to the rise of Scotch cocktails as a trend,” says Gabriel Cardarella, Dewar’s North American Brand Ambassador.

Innovation, non-age statements, and even cocktails—ask a single malt Scotch marketer what’s driving growth there, and that’s pretty much what you’ll hear. “The trends across single malt Scotch, like with Irish whiskey, are very positive right now,” says Andy Nash, vice president marketing for William Grant & Sons. The cocktail renaissance has helped banish some stuffy beliefs about how best to drink malts, he adds, which has been helpful. “The way whiskey drinks are coming back, like the Manhattan and Old Fashioned, encourages experimentation among consumers.

Getting increased attention for both flavored iterations as well as high rye expressions, Canadian whisky producers are finding new consumers at many levels of experience and interest. Helping to drive that is innovation. “We’re finding that consumers are more interested than ever in discovering new and unique taste profiles across all whiskey categories,” says Lucas Erickson, senior director at Beam Suntory.

In addition to the phenomenal growth in Irish distilleries coming on line—current projections indicate more than 30 distilleries are or will be open soon, up from a handful less than ten years ago—what’s helped to drive growth in the United States is the new world of cask finishes. The proliferation of brands promises to raise all boats as consumers get a broader brand selection to consider, with various tweaks and attributes. “Irish whiskey in the United States has historically been dominated by a few large brands, so there’s a lot of room for consumers to learn about the category and the nuances across the various types as they become more established here,” says Erickson.

“It’s great to see consumers breaking out of one type of category and experimenting,” Bajarria says. “For a marketer it’s exciting because there is only so much we can impact, and it’s all about how consumers relate to your brand. These are brands consumers love, and they can’t wait for the next one to come out.”

Imported vodka brands face a challenging environment in the U.S. market. Overall growth remains fairly flat, and imports face competition from domestic vodka and American craft brands. And of course, brown spirits (especially whiskey) have made inroads against the most popular white spirit.

Successful brands are following a multi-pronged strategy of pricing adjustments, emphasizing points of differentiation, and pursuing innovations in new releases and packaging to generate excitement in the retail setting. In this market, messaging is key. Producers must communicate clear, concise, and compelling brand stories while maintaining transparency about authenticity of origins and craft of production methods.

Overall, the major players in the import category remain positive about vodka. “Vodka remains the most popular spirit in America and is often referred to as the backbone of the spirits industry,” notes Alex Tomlin, senior vice president at Diageo North America.

Imported vodka brands have a strong, yet saturated, presence in the U.S. market,” says Clayton Wai-Poi, vice president of marketing, Vodka, Cognac, and Gin at Beam Suntory. “Consumers are always looking for innovative brands to become their go-to,” he adds.

For vodka brands, brandishing the word “import” on the label is no longer enough for today’s consumers. Taking a page from whiskey, vodka focuses on points of differentiation, provenance, and production. The buzzwords today are authenticity and transparency.

“The declining importance of being imported and changing consumer preferences have continued to evolve how consumers behave and how brands act in the marketplace. To that end, we’ve seen brands carefully targeting niche audiences with unique offerings to gain a consumer following,” says Wai-Poi.

“Consumers today want truth and transparency,” says Nicolas Guillant, president of Marie Brizard Wine & Spirits Americas. “There are opportunities for brands that are real and are differentiated. For a long time, vodka was vodka. Consumers (and especially bartenders and retailers) are waking up to the differences in vodka.”

“One of the main driving forces in the industry is that consumers are paying more attention than ever to where ingredients come from. Consumers will continue to demand transparency regarding whether a product’s ingredients are entirely natural,” says Tom Spaven, brand director Grey Goose Vodka.

While creating new vodka expressions and flavors takes research and time, re-packaging is a relatively easy way to grab consumer attention anew. That’s especially true of bottle wraps and sleeves, which can be easily redesigned and slipped over the original bottles to fit the occasion.

Despite the challenges, the major players in the imported vodka category remain upbeat about the future. “While there are many new players and trends in the spirits world, we’ve found vodka drinkers to be extremely loyal and steadfast in their support of the overall category,” says Tomlin. “Vodka remains a highly competitive category with continuous innovation and hundreds of new vodka brands emerging in just the last few years.”

KEEP ON THINKING COCKTAILS!

Producers, distributors, bartenders, and retailers agree that tapping into the continuing interest in cocktails leads to increased profits. So keep on encouraging your customers to enjoy versatile, mixable vodka and flavored vodkas in refreshing cocktails!

All it takes is vodka or flavored vodka and a mixer to make a quick-and-easy sipper. For a more sophisticated Long Island Iced Tea, martini, or cosmopolitan mixed drink, just add a few more ingredients.

FINDING THE FLAVOR

BY JACK ROBERTIELLO

Note: This excerpt is printed with permission from the November/December 2017 issue of StateWays—the Beverage Alcohol Merchandising Magazine for Control States.

If you're looking for liveliness and interest in rum these days, it's probably happening in the flavored and spiced sector of the category.

Rum's overall woes are well known, and the general category was down once again in 2016. But the subcategory from which growth is coming indicates that many consumers, particularly younger ones not attuned to the much-vaunted cocktail renaissance, still enjoy their spirits via the casual, mixed drink, beachside bar-style drinking that spiced and flavored rums offer.

While tweaks on the spiced rum subcategory are becoming more attractive to producers lately, flavored rum portfolios are undergoing more scrutiny these days. "Like the flavored vodka section, the flavored rum section has been shrinking. The good news is that the premium rums are getting traction, and that opens up opportunities for more producers like ours," says John Eason, COO/EVP of Serralles USA, owner of the Don Q rum line.

"Consumers have proven that they like popular flavors they understand," says Daniel Clarke, brand director USA for Malibu. "Some new ones come in because the flavor is trendy, but then interest falls off. There are a couple of things we'll be shedding from a trade perspective, but the goal is to clear our shelf space. By focusing on the core set, we are looking to accelerate growth."

"The higher end of the spiced rum category is trending higher, and that's what interests us," Eason says. The Don Q coconut flavor, like many coconut rums, is proving to be strong, and recently the brand launched a pineapple extension to go with lemon, passion, and mojito flavored extensions.

SPICE UP FAVORITE MARDI GRAS DRINKS

What better time to highlight spiced rum than Mardi Gras! This year, the festivities begin with parades and parties in January and end with an all-out, pageant-filled gala on Fat Tuesday, March 5th.

In addition to sipping them and splashing them into Coke and other soft drinks, suggest they try them in their favorite Mardi Gras mixed drinks.

Fill the glass with ice; pour the rum over the ice, and top with a splash of club soda. Garnish with the mint sprig and lime wedge.

TRENDS TO WATCH

Boom times continue for the alcohol industry.

BY THE BEVERAGE INFORMATION & INSIGHTS GROUP

Note: This excerpt is printed with permission from the SMay/June 2018 issue of StateWays—the Beverage Alcohol Merchandising Magazine for Control States.

THE BEVERAGE INFORMATION & INSIGHTS GROUP TRACKS CONSUMPTION TRENDS THROUGHOUT THE BEVERAGE ALCOHOL INDUSTRY THROUGH ITS HANDBOOKS AND CUSTOM AUDIT SERVICES. HERE ARE SOME OF THE TRENDS THE GROUP WATCHED IN 2018.

Boom times continue for the alcohol industry. And there's room for more growth across multiple categories and styles.

Modern consumers are as explorative as they've ever been. The ongoing craft movement has customers shifting through categories and brands as they try a little of everything. While this does mean that people are less brand-loyal, it also means they are willing to buy at different price points.

A high price tag is no longer a turnoff. Instead, it signals the higher quality—and luxury experience—that consumers now crave.

Meanwhile, Millennials continue to define the market in many ways. Their flighty palate is partly what's behind the rise of cross-category experimenting and brand disloyalty. And their shorter attention spans and hyper-connectivity with technology has forced brands to find new modern ways to connect with consumers.

PREMIUMIZATION EVERYWHERE

In nearly every category, premium-level products have increased in sales. Those spending more are looking for certain quality factors—noble grapes or top appellations—and are less hesitant to pay top dollar for local products. The premiumization trend should continue to transcend categories and drive growth in the foreseeable future.

WHISKEY BLENDS RISE, AGE STATEMENTS WANE

Brown spirits are so popular that many producers cannot keep up. There is simply not enough old whiskey in barrels to meet this demand. To get more new products onto shelves, distilleries have increasingly ditched age statements in favor of blends.

Do people care? The reaction seems mixed. On one hand many consumers today (Millennials especially) seem to care more about flavors than numbers on labels.

At the same time, “blended whiskey” is no longer a pejorative. Not when producers like High West and The Macallan are swapping age statements for time at the blender's table.

Modern consumers do not turn up their noses at blends. But on the other hand, there are traditionalist drinkers who still abide by age statements. These are veteran whiskey enthusiasts.

BARREL AND CASK FINISHES

The rise of whiskeys finished in used casks—sherry, rum, cognac, wine, or other whiskeys—has created new flavors for people to purchase and explore. From the supplier side, finishing whiskey provides another outlet for creativity. But distillers should remember that there can be drawbacks to innovation. Overall, though, finishing (when done right) should continue to add new and interesting products to shelves and backbars.

VODKA STILL PAYS THE BILLS

Vodka might not generate the same consumer fervor as the trendier brown spirits, but this retail mainstay continues to move at a high clip. Even premium vodka seems to have caught on.

Despite the long history of category supremacy enjoyed by imported vodkas, American brands are having a moment. This has led consumers to question the higher prices on imported brands.

IMMATURE WHISKEYS HIT THE MARKET

There is a wave of whiskeys that have reached market before full proper maturation. What's behind this?

Mostly the culprit is newer distilleries. These young businesses (understandably) want to recoup some of their upfront investment costs through product revenue. Bottling two-year-old bourbon and selling it for $55 generates cash faster than sitting on aging stock for years and years.

Immature whiskeys typically taste grainy (like a mouthful of Cheerios), with a sharp bite from not spending enough time in barrels to mellow properly. That's not to say all young whiskeys are terrible. There are some distillers putting out younger products high in quality.

THE BOTTOM LINE

According to alcoholic beverage experts, consumers are now buying more premium and super-premium spirits, brown spirits (including whiskeys finished in used casks as well as high-quality young whiskeys) are growing in popularity, and vodka continues to sell well. Take advantage of these trends and today's cocktail culture to increase your profits by prominently highlighting these products and encouraging your customers to try them in their favorite mixed drinks.

With flavors that range from smooth to bold and sweet to spicy enhanced with enticing aromas echoing a wide variety of fruits and flowers, bourbon makes the perfect spirit for Bloody Marys. If your customers are hosting brunches on football playoff days or other get-togethers, encourage them to set up a Bloody Mary bar so their guests can mix drinks as they wish. Suggest they include several different brands and flavors of bourbon plus Bloody Mary mixes or tomato juice and the other ingredients needed to make the drinks from scratch.

Our state-of-the-art
wax-dipping device.
(We call her Renée.)

Every bottle of Maker's Mark® is hand-dipped in our signature red wax. It's not fast, easy or cost-effective, but if we're this particular about our bottles, imagine the care that goes into making our bourbon.
